Presented by:

Bob Cox,
Workplace Strategist
with Herman Miller Inc.

Where do you do your best work?

Do you know how is your office space is being used and the energy consumption for work stations, meeting areas or entire buildings?

Do you have choice in when and where you work? How much of your day is spent at your desk, in meetings or off site? Do you know how may people actually use conference rooms? Do you have underutilized space that could be used more productively? How can you be sure? And, do you unplug your monitor and shut off your lights when they're not in use?

In our ever-changing world of technology, Herman Miller will link worker mobility to space utilization and programmable environments for organizations seeking to save dollars on their overhead costs, while investing in their greatest asset - their employees. Join us for a short discussion of these topics.

Bob Cox is a West Area Workplace Strategist who enables organizations to realize greater value from their work environment by creating workplace strategies tied to business objectives. Before joining Herman Miller in 2004, Bob spent 26 years with Gensler, an international architecture firm, where he planned more than 10 million square feet of corporate facilities. Bob holds a Bachelor of Architecture from the University of Colorado and is a member of the American Institute of Architects.
